

DPRK Explosion Not Nuclear After All

Scientists have confirmed that the explosion carried out at 2:00 pm today was not a nuclear test but rather a large, chemical explosion. No fission products were detected by watchdog agencies.

"We would like to impress upon the delegates that we have thus abided by the rules and not tested any nuclear weapons or carried out nuclear explosions," the DPRK delegation says. "Thus we implore the US to stop ignoring us and to continue negotiations that they have no basis to be canceling."

The US comments, "We are pleased to hear that North Korea did not in fact engage in testing and look forward to new developments in the negotiations."

The world is left wondering: why did they explode a giant chemical bomb on their own soil?

Pakistan and Iran in Cahoots

A credible third party source has confirmed ongoing secret talks between Pakistan and Iran regarding the transfer of sensitive nuclear and missile technology. While both delegations vehemently deny these allegations, it is certain that the offer was made.

Secret US-UK Treaty Revealed

An anonymous source revealed the text of a secret US-UK agreement specifying transparency laws regarding Iran's nuclear program. Iran refused to comment before the plenary.

Giant Rabbits Hop into Plenary

Forget impending nuclear holocaust or diplomatic breakdown. Plenary today was remarkable because of the presence of two long-eared participants. An extremely tall member of the Russian delegation presented DPRK's tallest delegate Adriel with a gift of two giant rabbits from a trash bag. It is unclear as to whether the rabbits are for the delegation or leader Kim Jong-Il. Would the rabbits survive the arduous flight to the DPRK anyways? The Truthiness Express wisely recommends a rabbit stew party to conclude talks today.

A more pertinent question: How did the yellow rabbit happen to match DPRK delegate Adriel's shirt? Is this just a case of incredible fashion intuition, eerie coincidence, or was this all planned?

Delegates have been furiously sending in their comments:

France- This is not an eerie coincidence, but rather evidence of blood-lines. the real reason behind the transfer of rabbits was family reunification. Congratulations, Adriel. Your son has returned.

Japan- The Japanese being a people who value aesthetic purity are pleased that the Russians were able to genetically engineer rabbits that matched the fashion of the DPRK.

Anonymous Western Power- It was likely planned. The DPRK is up to no good.

American Spy at Bushehr Confirmed

It has been confirmed by both Iranian and Russian sources that they spy caught in the Bushehr facility is in fact American. Additionally, these sources tell us that the individual now in custody had devious intentions and was part of a US military covert mission. Paraphernalia confiscated from his body included the following: an activation button, a grappling hook, some loose springs, a wallet-sized photo of Sasha & Malia Obama, some false mustaches, and a note in a code yet to be broken by either Russian or Iranian authorities. Sources are as of yet unable to comment as to the exact nature of said individual's activities or his current whereabouts.

We're sorry, kiddos.

In the third issue of the Truthiness Express, an article entitled "Cooking Corner" incorrectly spelled the name of Kim Jong-Il. The Supreme also goes by "His Highness," "His Most Portly One," "Mister Eloquent and Elegantly-Coiffed One," and "The il-est." The editors of the Truthiness Express sincerely regret this error.

The Truthiness Express would additionally like to apologize for a misunderstanding that occurred during the fourth plenary session. A reporter from the Express, herself a loyal American, attempted to throw a armful of red and white roses at the speaker from the US, and in a calamitous blunder (a direct result of blinding patriotic fervor) instead removed and hurled her shoe. Mistakes were made.

In related news, rumor has it the US has banned shoes from the plenary floor. Not like they really have the authority to determine who wears what where, but they sure do like to try. They will allegedly continue barefoot. Good luck, United States, good luck.

DELEGATION PROFILE

Japan's Bryan Nakayama: Creative or Crazy?

As the world begins to crumble around them, this weekend's delegates cannot help but wonder: Is Japanese Delegation Chair Bryan Nakayama for realz??

Often seen sporting a rising sun headband and proudly brandishing his Japanese passport, it is clear that Nakayama loves his country. But his behavior takes a more sinister note when compared Kim Jong-Il, the leader of the Democratic People's Republic of Korea.

One of his professors admitted in a secret press conference, "I was once innocently trying to lead conference when I was forced to stop. Bryan was demolishing a gigantic gummie bear of at least one pound. He was waving it around and biting off its limbs.

Kim Jong-Il enjoys giant rabbits, Bryan Nakayama enjoys giant gummie bears. Should we all be afraid?
