

TRUTHINESS EXPRESS

Vol 3, 2010

UN Conference Back to High School?

There were many hurt feelings expressed during the first plenary session of Saturday morning. Iran and France repaired their rocky relationship as Iran apologizes for the bullying of a French diplomat in Tehran. The DPRK tattles on the US for alleged profanity directed towards the DPRK delegates. The Chinese delegation entered a plea for peace, mimicking the, "why can't we all just get along," attitude of a high school health video. The relationship between the US and India is perhaps most resembles a reversion back to adolescent days. India, the only exclusively female delegation, spoke out passionately about the blatant sexism penetrating the conference. Things were becoming moist, and those things were our eyes. "I've been touched by India," said one conference attendee, "we are all old enough to know that it's just not ok to objectify women like that."

Still Rude After All This Time:

Evidently, the delegates failed to take this esteemed publications advice and purchase How Rude. This morning's session continued to be plagued by inappropriate outbursts. Chair Alex Montgomery had to remind that there would be, "no comments on comments." He further sharply informed delegates who, precisely, is chairing this proceeding. It has been anonymously reported that American delegation chair, David Azrael, was heard to remark of Iran, "Yeah we're shitting on their economy; we don't give a fuck about their economy." Perhaps the US delegation needs some soap for that mouth.

It's raining deuterium oxide! Explosion in Iran

TEHRAN The initial reports are coming in about a seemingly catastrophic explosion in or near Iran's heavy water nuclear reactor. Reporters have not been allowed access to investigate in detail yet, and the Iranian Revolutionary Guard has blocked all access to the site. Details are scarce as of now. We have received no official statement from Iran or any other country claiming that the explosion was an attack, but the involvement by another country such as US or Israel cannot be definitively ruled out. From what the Truthiness Express has intuited so far, the explosion has nearly destroyed the heavy water reactor. While precise numbers are unavailable, Truthiness Express estimates that this explosion has set back Iran's nuclear ambitions by somewhere between "a little" and "somewhat." When countries attending the conference being held at Reed were asked for a statement, all refused save Israel. an Israeli diplomat, who will remain anonymous, is quoted as saying "Hahaha, oh man, what a riot. Sucks to be you, Iran."

Security Blotter:

12:03. India calls the US delegates misogynists. US delegates begin to get rowdy. Security stands by but does not end up needing to take action.

12:15. Pakistan wants to remove sanctions on Iran. US scoffs.

12:36. DPRK feels threatened by the US. Asks for increased security. Security is given because the US delegates are bullies.

12:47. Israel's drawing of defense missiles looks suspiciously like penises. Security is left to wonder if maybe those Code Pink protesters had a point...

12:58. In a dramatic end to the plenary session, the DPRK announces preparations for a nuclear test. Security is increased.

1:52. A official US source has to say that an aircraft carrier group is currently close to the Persian Gulf to prevent possible pirates.

North Korean Nuclear Test Sites Preparing

SEOUL Google Maps updated their satellite imagery of North Korea and the surrounding land earlier this week. This somewhat routine update went unnoticed until today, when, while taking a break from a StarCraft marathon, a high-school aged South Korean citizen who has asked to remain anonymous decided to browse Google Earth and see if there were any funny-looking or interesting updates to the South Asian maps. To his surprise, he noticed activity that strongly resembled what he imagined preparing a nuclear launch would look like. Thinking little of it, he left the computer turned on and went to go eat and hydrate before continuing his video gaming. In an extremely unlikely and fortunate turn of events, the boy's father, a retired military general, went on the computer while the boy was away. The general immediately confirmed his son's suspicions, and contacted the R.O.K.'s military. Truthiness Express's intelligence gathering operations were informed that both the R.O.K. and the U.S. have now confirmed that the DPRK is preparing some sort of missile test in its rural areas. The movement and equipment strongly resembles the designs for nuclear tipped ballistic missiles that the U.S. believes were sold to North Korea. North Korean officials have refused to comment beyond a ominous statement by a mid-ranking general on the DMZ: "Soon our official statement will be written on the very earth in righteous fire. All hail the Eternal President of the Republic!"

Israeli Forces Mobilizing, Tell Arab Nations "Don't mind us."

TEL AVIV Both Syria and Egypt have announced to the world that they have confirmed Israeli troop movements on a massive scale. Israel's troops have been pushed to their borders, and the Air Force has mobilized many of its fighters and bombers. There does not seem to be a clear target for Israel's aggression, and both Egypt and Syria see this as, for now, a simple display of force. However, it is undeniable that Israel is now in position to air-strike nearly any nation in the Middle East with a devastating attack, and now has the troops in place to invade its neighbors and/or defend against counterattacks. Israel has not announced any official war game taking place; in fact Israel has been totally unavailable for comment. The silence on Israel's side is concerning if for no other reason than the uncertainty and tension it fosters in Israel's neighbors. In light of the explosion in Iran's heavy water reactor, Iran and the other countries at the Conference at Reed will certainly not take this news lightly.