Course Description and Goals

Full course for one semester. This course introduces the theoretical study of international relations, with a focus on structures, systems, and strategies. Students will learn to perform basic research and analysis through writing and thinking about events in world politics from different perspectives, including realism, liberalism, and feminism. Readings are drawn from historic and contemporary scholars of international relations, cover a wide variety of issues, and are grouped together in conflicting pairs where possible. Assignments are a mixture of analysis, research, and experiential learning. Lecture-conference.

Requirements

Class Participation

Students are required to actively participate in the class; they will have the opportunity to do so both during and outside of classroom hours. Good participation involves—among other things—listening carefully to others, referring or responding to the previous speaker’s comments, and asking questions in addition to or instead of making statements. There is such a thing as bad participation. This includes—but is not limited to—interrupting others, dominating conversations, and conducting ad hominem attacks.

Starting the second week, every student should have a question or observation about at least one of the authors assigned for a given day. I may call on you at any time during class to start a conversation with your question/observation. You may want to print it out or write it down if you frequently can’t remember the brilliant observation you had. Students are required to turn in their questions/observations to Moodle prior to their section by 8 AM; this is a very good way of demonstrating participation in the event that you tend to listen more than speak in class. You may also participate by discussing the material online in Moodle forums after the class. After the midterm (week 7), students will sign up for three days to lead discussion in their section. On those days, they are responsible for helping to lead discussion by formulating 2-3 questions to send to their entire section by 8 PM the night before section and for taking an active role in facilitating the discussion during conference.

Lectures will give background information on and integrate across readings and topics. I encourage you to ask questions both during and after each lecture; I will typically leave some time at the end for this purpose. Slides will be provided so that you do not have to take notes on the basic structure of each lecture; however, you will need to take notes in order to digest and remember the content. Section will typically start with a set of questions regarding the basics of the articles and how they relate to each other. After establishing a common understanding of the articles, we will move to more general discussion. I do this to ensure that you understood the basic assumptions, mechanisms, and implications of each theory, and will consequently often contain a Socratic component. This is also a good time to ask one of your questions! Sometimes this will take up almost the entire class period. This is another reason to post your question/observation to Moodle in advance so I can get a sense of where you are stuck or what you are interested in and incorporate that into the first part of section. As the class progresses and as we move from theory to practice, we will dedicate more time to the discussion portion of class. Sometimes we will not get to all of the readings or very far in the discussion. This is deliberate; you will still benefit from the context provided by those pieces even if we don’t discuss them. If we miss something in class, you are most welcome to post (or re-post) your question/observation to Moodle after the class. If you typically don’t say much in class, posing thoughts or responding to others’ contributions on Moodle is a good way to demonstrate engagement.

If you miss a day of class for any reason whatsoever, you may make it up by posting a summary of each of the readings for that day to the relevant Moodle forum. In order to make up missed days from the first half of the semester, these must be posted before the first day of classes after the break; from the second half, by the end of reading period. If you are sick, do NOT come to section and spread it to the rest of us. Instead, stay home, write your summaries up (which all of you should be doing every day in any case), and get better.

Readings

Readings for the course are drawn from two books (a collection of condensed articles and a textbook) and E-Readings, which can be downloaded directly from the links on Moodle. These are best used in conjunction with Zotero, which is supported by the library. Students are expected to bring a copy of the readings to class every day for reference. Students who use laptops and tablets for notetaking learn less and do less well on assessments, and the mere presence of your smartphone reduces your available cognitive capacity; consequently, laptops and cell phones are not permitted in class, and tablet devices and convertible laptops may be used without a keyboard for the sole purpose of bringing the readings. Readings marked “Further” on the syllabus are other relevant articles or books; they are not required for class. Students who have a particular interest in the topics in question are encouraged to read these pieces and to incorporate them into their assignments. Both books are required for the course; they are for sale at the bookstore, and the Drezner book is on reserve at the library as well. The Drezner book is available to be checked out as an ebook.

We are also reading two chapters from Kim Clausing's new book Open: The Progressive Case for Free Trade, Immigration, and Global Capital. It is not available until March 4, however, and is optional rather than required.

Optional Books

- Kimberly A. Clausing (2019) Open: The Progressive Case for Free Trade, Immigration, and Global Capital. Harvard <<http://www.worldcat.org/oclc/1083120667>>, ISBN 0674919335 [Amazon]

While this is not a course on current topics in international politics (any one of which could provide material for an entire course) or how to be a politician, students are also expected to keep up with world events through daily reading of international news. Recommended news sites will be posted on the course web site. You are encouraged to bring up world events in section, however.

Course Website

Frequent use of the course website will be helpful for success in the class. Discussion and collaboration with your peers in both sections of the class is available to you through the website; supplemental and core readings will be made available there; and assignments and exams will be turned in electronically using the site.

Simulations

Two of the three major pieces of work for this course will center around simulations. The first will take place during the third week of classes on the south lawn in front of Eliot Hall (this may be rescheduled depending on weather conditions). The second will take place from April 11–13 and will take a total of about eighteen hours. Participating in these simulations is required for completing these two assignments and therefore the course. If you cannot participate in these simulations, you must come talk to me immediately.

Assignments

There are four formal pieces of work for this course. A sheet explaining each will be passed out in class. In general, for the group analysis assignments, I look for four things: A clear argument in the introductory paragraph, an explanation of the theories that you will be using, an illustration of your argument with direct examples, and a conclusion that discusses the implications of your findings. Please note that bibliographies are required and do count towards the word count.

- The first assignment is an online, open-book but time-limited 50-minute exam (which you will have 80 minutes to do) that will be available in the slot usually occupied by the lecture on March 12.
- The second assignment is a group analysis of the April 18–20 negotiation. This will be an account (from a delegation point of view) of the negotiations and an analysis of why the negotiations ended the way they did. This assignment should be based on the negotiation record, which will be compiled from email correspondences and any postings made to Moodle by the participants. It is due on Monday, April 29 by noon.
- The third assignment is an online, open-book but time-limited 50-minute exam (which you will have 80 minutes to do) that will be available for at least a week after the last section.

Citation and Plagiarism

A major goal of this course is to encourage good reading, research, and citation habits. Good research requires good documentation of sources and the ability to put one's own analysis and thoughts into a paper rather than relying on others. When in doubt as to whether you should cite something, always do it. Citations are required for ideas as well as facts, and are imperative even if you are not directly quoting authors. Make sure that you provide as specific a citation as possible; if an author discusses an idea in one section or one page, cite the specific section or page instead of the full article or book. I usually recommend that students use in-text author-date citation with full Chicago Manual of Style citations; see their Citation Quick Guide: <http://www.chicagomanualofstyle.org/tools_citationguide.html>.

However, style is less important than the cites being present. If you use an idea or a fact without attribution, you are plagiarizing someone else's work. Plagiarism and cheating are violations of academic integrity and thus violations of Reed's Honor Principle. As specified by Reed's academic conduct policy, such violations will result in disciplinary actions, including suspension or permanent dismissal from the College. Plagiarism is submitting a piece of work which in part or in whole is not entirely the student's own work without attributing those same portions to their correct source. For examples of plagiarism and how to avoid it, see <<http://tinyurl.com/jdlrbd3>>. If nothing else, you should avoid "sinister buttocks" syndrome. For more information on Reed's policies see: <http://www.reed.edu/academic/gbook/comm_pol/acad_conduct.html>.

Plagiarism often comes as the result of a student being up against a deadline without being able to meet it. If you are having trouble meeting a deadline for whatever reason, please contact me. Because every assignment is a paper that will be handed out well in advance, I have no problem giving extensions. It is always better to ask for more time than to plagiarize. When you ask for an extension, you should a) explain what events are causing you to miss the deadline and b) request an amount of time proportional to the interfering events. You may ask for an extension up to, but not exceeding, the amount of time remaining for the assignment, except for cases of emergencies or unanticipated circumstances.

Accommodations

If you'd like to request academic accommodations due to a disability, please contact Disability Support Services. If you have a letter from Student Services, please let me know so we can discuss those accommodations.
